Bollywood movies websites for mobile

I'm great! These are the pictures that have become small. -- Norma Desmond in Sunset Blvd. A declining star opposes a new technology that it accuses of ruining the film industry; if the mere addition of her made her so bitter, what could she have thought of watching us movies on smartphones, where the images are literally small? Probably nothing good, although her opinion might have softened somewhat if she knew that some apps make her silent movies out print easier to find, read, discuss and watch. Again, the app that allows people to find his mansion on google maps might not go any worse. Norma has never had any luck with unreserved guests. In the following pages, we'll look at these apps and other must-haves for the movie fanatic's phone. What these programs lack in screen size, they compensate in functionality and portability. You can use them, not only in a molding mansion, wrapped in a turban and discolored glamour, but in the world, wherever you take your mobile device. All right, Mr. DeMille, these apps are ready for close-ups. Content cost: Free (Note: Price information for all apps that made our list updated in August 2011.) Devices: Available for iPhone, Android, BlackBerry, Windows Phone and WAP. Advertisement This popular app gives you user-friendly access to its namesake web page, a social networking site that allows you to compare movie odds and tastes with moviegoers around the net. In addition to user ratings, Flixster gives you instant access to a movie's cool rating to the Rotten Tomatoes aggregator, which it owns. You can also use it to find information about movies, showtimes, maps and ticket prices, or to watch trailers. A slightly awkward interface allows you to buy movie tickets through MovieTickets.com, making Flixster well-suited either as a one-stop shop for planning an evening or as a regular meeting place for sociable search seats for other affable aficionados. Cost: Free devices: available for iPhone and Android Advertising If you're a movie nut that doesn't mind breaking the fourth wall, or an aspiring filmmaker who wants to get better at the screening site, then we have the app for you. Fed by the Internet Movie Database (IMDb), Scout Rental maps the actual locations where your favorite movies were shot - or, if you prefer, shows you the places closest to you where the shoot took place. You're likely to find some surprises, even if you don't live anywhere near Tinseltown, and the novelty alone will keep you for more. You can search nearby (using GPS) by location name or film title. If nothing else, you can impress your out-of-town guests when you take them to the spot where Alfred Hitchcock filmed his 1960 thriller Psycho (the Jefferson Hotel in Phoenix, Arizona). Cost: Free devices: available for Android, iPhone, iPad and Windows 7 Mobile; also accessible via the mobile browser to m.RunPee.com ad To misparaphrase a Rogers Kenny shot, you need to know when when to go and when to run. Except it's not cards; we dance around a more delicate subject: the inevitable result of going all-in on a bucket of soda (since when is 32 ounces considered a small?). Let's face it: You're never going to do it through this Lord of the Rings trilogy, and denial won't stop you from running out of Cleopatra long before its 320 minutes are in place. Don't worry, RunPee covers you. Not only does this handy application list the slow times of each movie best suited to take care of business, but it also tells you how long you can be away (usually four minutes) and what you'll miss. You can even have it buzz you as the pee windows approach, although the label of good film observation requires keeping these troubles to a minimum. The app also lists what happens in the first five minutes of the movie, and if there is a teaser clip waiting for you after the roll of credits. Cost: Free devices: available for iPhone, iPad, Android and Windows Phone 7 Advertising Since it quietly came onto the movie scene as a USENET group on Oct. 17, 1990, IMDb has become the go-to resource for anyone who wants to know anything about movies. How could respecting moviegoers not carry the app version of this venerable website in their pockets and handbags? The database gives you access to more than 1.5 million searchable movie and television titles and more than 3.2 million celebrities, actors, directors and team members, as well as anecdotes, soundtracks, places and other interesting treats. More than a pocket website distillation, this app includes features to evaluate movies, set up watch lists, watch trailers, read news, find theaters and show hours, and purchase tickets through movieickets.com. Cost: $1.99 for Scene It? Movies 2 for iPhone; $4.99 for Scene It? Movies 2 for iPad; free for Scene It? Everyday for Android devices: available for iPhone, iPad and Android Advertising If there's one thing people at Screenlife know is how to occupy a market space. What began as a DVD-based and card-based evening game for moviegoers has evolved and spread to Xbox 360 consoles to PlayStation and Wii, social media sites such as Facebook, and now to mobile platforms of the iPhone and iPad. Like the original game, the app serves anecdotes, images and videos, now optimized for mobile devices. It's designed for the party game, and the high-definition iPad version will get the common leap. The genre packs available include comedy, romance and horror, as well as the Twilight series, Harry Potter series and the television show 30 Rock. To help bring Android users into the cold, Screenlife has also released Scene It? Daily, which offers updated daily quizzes covering movies, television, music and celebrities. Cost: Free (Netflix subscription required) Devices: available for iPad, iPhone, iPod touch, Android and Windows Phone 7 Advertising Here's your ticket to instantly stream movies and TV shows on your mobile device without the movie rentals. Search by name and sort by genre, just like on the Netflix website, then watch videos of your instant queue on your phone. If you're running Android, be sure to check if the app supports your device and your operating system (OS) version. The main complaint with the Netflix app is that it only allows you to sort your instant queue - and only badly according to some. If you want to sort your disk queue, you'll need another app, such as iPhlix (Apple) and NetQ (Android) (see next section). Cost: $2.99 for iPhlix and $0.99 for NetQ devices: the iPhlix app is designed for iPhone and iPad. NetQ works on Android. Advertising Of course, Netflix has penetrated every market and device imaginable - from Blu-ray players to TVs to consoles and content boxes like Apple TV - with its Watch Instantly service. Wait until you try to sort your queues using their app if you haven't already. The disk queue is nowhere to be seen, and dealing with instant queue sorting requires a knack for non-linear thinking and more than a little patience. This looks like a job for apps. We don't feel that a single app could claim top honors for Apple and Android, so we divided our choice: iPhlix for iPhone and NetQ for Android. iPhlix lets you add, delete and rearrange items in your instant queues and drives. It also includes search features, sharing movie recommendations with friends, and filtering via Blu-ray, DVD or snapshot. NetQ offers similar features, but adds Rotten Tomatoes scores to the mix, as well as YouTube reviews and searches for related movie trailers. Cost: Free devices: available for iPhone and Android Advertising If you rank among the ranks of the cult Redbox, the ubiquitous vending machines to rent movies on the cheap, then we have the app for you. Like the Redbox website, the associated app allows you to locate the nearest movie machine and view a map and directions on how to get there. You can then check out Redbox's DVD and Blu-ray library and book your evening's entertainment. Alternatively, you can choose a movie you want to see and use the app to locate the magenta monolith closest to you that has it in stock. All hail Redbox! Cost: A free version allows you to follow 50 titles; a paid version available for about $5 gives you unlimited slots. Devices: available for iPhones, Pads and Android Advertising Phones When You Store movies like preserves in a fallout shelter, it's easy to lose track of what you have - which is a shame, since half the pleasure of having a collection is being able to read it. You need something that will allow you to organize yourself, a gadget that makes data entry easy and automatically fills in the relevant information. My Movies is the app for you. Just add your movies manually or scan their barcodes using your phone's camera, and you're off and running. You can browse the details of your movies, watch movie trailers in your collection and search and filter filter type (DVD, Blu-ray, HD DVD), genre, group (property, desired...), watched, parental rating levels, production years, personal categories and online status. It's also a convenient way to keep track of the movies you've lent - and it could prevent you from accidentally buying a movie you already own on VHS, Beta, DVD, Special Edition and Blu-ray. Use it as a standalone app or in conjunction with My Movies for Windows software. Cost: $1.99 Devices: Android, iPhone and iPad Anyone can stream familiar and widely published movies on their mobile devices, but real movie fanatics revel in the thrill of digging up buried treasure - movies mentioned in passing in the dusty almanacs of cinema, or buried in databases and catalogs, but that never thanks to the inventory of video stores and services. Now there is an app that allows you to see these movies of footnotes, a leads to the rarest avies of movies. The interface is charming: wooden shelves, lined with authentic art provided by IMDb, invite you to play classics (and not so classic) starring John Wayne, Lon Chaney, Vincent Price, Laurel and Hardy, Charlie Chaplin, Spencer Tracy, Cary Grant, James Cagney, Elizabeth Taylor and Judy Garland, Alfred Hitchcock, Buster Keaton, Orson Welles, Roger Corman and George Romero are among the directors available. You can browse films by genre or by search by actor, director, keyword or title. Like any good app, Movie Vault works according to your schedule. You can set aside movies in a queue for later viewing or pause the one you're watching as needed. Best of all, the entire library occupies the public domain, which means you won't pay extra for the content itself. Keep passing the popcorn around as you browse the related links next door. Tired of getting spam calls on your phone? You can install an app like Nomorobo which says it can stop unwanted calls. But how does it work?
